

A charming photograph of Miss Roberta Willard, the beautiful daughter of America's Ambassador to Spain. It was in the fall of 1913 that Colonel Joseph Edward Willard, of Virginia, was received by King Alfonso at Madrid as the first American Ambassador to Spain. Less than a year later national interest was aroused when Belle Willard, Miss Roberta's elder and equally attractive sister, was married in Madrid to Kermit Roosevelt. —Vance Dugan

Left—F. K. Foss, of the Chicago A. A., champion pole vaulter of the world, clearing the bar at the height of 13 feet 1 inch for a new record at the national senior A. A. U. championships and final Olympic tryouts held recently before a crowd of 25,000 sweltering people at the Harvard Stadium. —Wm. Higgins

Above—Wanted—quill-proof tires. Motorists in certain sections of the Adirondacks have been confronted with a new tire menace this summer—porcupines. These slow moving nocturnal roamers have a mean habit of wandering across the main highways without a stop, look and listen—and the result is too often a dead porky and a brand new cord thoroughly punctured with a number of steel-like quills. —Wide World

Mr. John W. Davis, American Ambassador to England, and Mrs. Davis arriving at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, to attend the funeral services of Major General William C. Gorgas. Left—The impressive funeral cortege of General Gorgas on its two-mile march from Alexandra Hospital to St. Paul's. The gun carriage is followed by the riderless charger of the former surgeon of the American Army. Immediately ahead of the caisson is the muffled band of the Coldstream Guards. General Gorgas was famous the world over for his work in stamping out yellow fever in the tropics. International Wide World
